

Sandy Galvin's Speech

June 5, 2020

Good afternoon everyone. Thank you all for your willingness and enthusiasm to display our wonderful country's symbol, the flag of the United States of America. My name is Sandy Galvin. If you don't already know it, I am the better half of Galvin and Galvin. Ha! Ha! I'm pretty sure you all know my husband, Kelly.

I am honored and proud to have been asked to dedicate this flag pole at the entrance monument to our subdivision. Many of us already have flags displayed in our front yards to honor those who have served or are presently serving our country. This particular flagpole, however, demonstrates our communal support for all who have served, many who have given their lives, to keep us free; and also, the wounded whose lives have completely changed because of their injuries. So, let us raise our subdivision's memorial to the men and women who are living each day in harm's way so that we may remain the best country on earth.
